Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-10 and 21-26 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kim (6,853,050) in view of Koike (2002/0079552) and Fournel et al (2003/0038338). The claimed invention includes a fuse structure which has two regions, one with more layers than the other, and with insulating layers between the conductive layers. The reference to Kim shows such a structure, for example in FIG. 2D, with a second less layered region in the middle, which comprises the actual fuse layer (210), and a more layered region on the side, which is comprised of alternating conductive and insulating layers, for example, conductive layers (210), (230) and (255), which alternate with insulating layers (220), (240) and (260).

The references to Koike and Fournel also show fuse structures having multiple, alternating conductive and insulating layers, and these references teach some specific features not explicitly shown in Kim. For example, Fournel teaches that the fuse layer may be formed at or near the top of the multi layered structure. Each reference also uses through holes to contact various parts of the fuse structure. In addition, Fournel uses a laser beam to trim the fuse [0003], while Koike shows a bridge structure formed by the first and second conductive regions.

Taken together, these references teach all of the claimed structural elements of the invention, and one skilled in the art would be motivated to combine these references in order to tailor a fuse structure that meets any topological requirements.
